With over 2 million birds counted, the #AussieBirdCount is over for another year - thank you for making every bird count!

The app and website will be open for one more week (Sunday 5 November) so you can submit any backdated counts.

Then the next steps are to vet and analyse the data, and with so many records this is going to be a big job! We hope to have the results out late November.

BirdLife Australia's Aussie Backyard Bird Count and Birddata programs show a possible decline in Laughing Kookaburras.

Data collected from heavily urbanised areas during the Aussie Backyard Bird Count suggests we are seeing a decline in this iconic species in the eastern capitals. Likely reasons for this are the loss of nesting hollows and possibly reductions in the availability of prey as we increasingly modify our urban landscapes.

We appreciate everyone taking time out of their busy lives to submit counts to the #AussieBirdCount. Thanks to citizen scientists like you BirdLife Australia is able to track large-scale biodiversity trends like these.
